CALL Committees 23
This is the Spring 2011 issue of the CALL Bulletin. Even though it is not quite spring yet, we have high hopes for improvement in the weather. Spring is a time of renewal and CALL is in the process of renewal as well. This month we elect a new Vice President/President Elect, Secretary, and Director, to help guide our Association into the future. Do not forget to vote; the election is open until midnight, March 15.

You will notice a change in this issue from previous years. Until this year, the CALL Bulletin has published the candidates’ biographies and personal statements in the Spring issue. This year and going forward, the CALL Executive Board has decided instead to publish links to the Elections portion of the CALL website, where these materials are available in a password-protected environment. As a result, we are able to publish the CALL Bulletin without restricting it to members only. The Bulletin showcases the various activities of CALL and provides substantive content on research and librarianship issues; it benefits not just the current membership of CALL but also publicizes and promotes the expertise and dedication of CALL members to the larger law librarianship community.

That expertise is clearly on display in the articles in this Spring 2011 issue. Lyonette Louis-Jacques introduces us to QR Codes in the TechBuzz column. Bob Winger gives us A View from the Firms on name changes for the law firm library. Andrea Tillander in Working Smarter asks us all what we have done to make our patrons’ lives easier. Alina Kelly reports on the enlightening tour of the Cook County Law Library organized by the Continuing Education Committee. Julienne Grant takes us even further afield, to a Spanish library with origins in the 16th century.

Dear Colleagues,

As I’m writing this letter, we are experiencing one of the worst blizzards in several decades of Chicago history. It hardly seems like spring (hopefully, it will soon!), but it’s a good chance to think about organizing and taking stock of personal and organizational goals for the next several months. We do this annually in our employment and personal lives, so it’s a good time to pause amidst the inclement weather and think about present and future projects and how to efficiently and effectively achieve our goals. Through the hard work of all of our CALL committees, I am proud that our tradition of CALL excellence has continued during the Fall 2010 term and into the New Year with a fine group of CALL events and activities slated for Spring 2011. In this issue of the CALL Bulletin, we are announcing a wonderful group of candidates for next year’s CALL Board. I would like to give a special thanks to Sheri Lewis, chair of the CALL Nominations Committee, for her work on organizing this list of candidates and to the members of the Nominations Committee (Anne Abramson, John Austin, Chris Morong, and Julie Pabarja). I’d also like to thank Sharon Nelson and members of the Elections Committee for coordinating the CALL Election this spring and distributing information about the candidates to CALL members in advance of the election. Thanks also to all of the candidates for the 2011-2012 Board for their willingness to run—it is a generous commitment of time and energy for our organization, so I’m extremely pleased that all of these talented individuals agreed to volunteer for CALL Board candidacy this year.

At the second CALL business meeting on November 17th at Maggiano’s, many CALL members attended and heard Patrick J. Lamb and Nicole Auerbach of the Valorem Law Group speak about “Delivering Value: Making an Impact at Your Firm.” Special thanks to Jill Matulionis and Ma-ribel Nash, our Meetings Co-Chairs, for their considerable work planning the second business meeting and its registration. I also want to thank the Meetings Committee members and CALL Vice President/President-Elect, Juli Jackson, for making sure that our business meetings in 2010-2011 are of top-notch quality and interest.

On January 14th, the CALL Continuing Education Committee held a successful library tour of the Cook County Public Library for CALL members. Special thanks to Jean Wenger for making the tour possible, Eugene Giudice and members of the CALL Continuing Education Committee for coordinating the event, and to the members of the Public Relations Committee, in particular Alina Kelly, for hosting a CALL-Up Event after the library tour. CALL-Up events are a wonderful way to meet other CALL members and informally chat with them outside formal CALL business meetings or continuing educational programming. If you haven’t attended a CALL-Up event yet, I would encourage you to attend one of the next CALL-Up events this spring as a great, informal opportunity to meet other CALL members and discuss law librarianship. Thanks to our Continuing Education Committee Co-Chairs, Annette Cade and Doris Nuding, for organizing such wonderful continuing education events for our membership this year! They will also be coordinating a 2011 CALL Institute Day later this spring, so keep an eye out for the details of this year’s Institute Day speakers and program.

As I’m working on this spring letter, I am again reminded of the great CALL Board members that I work with and seek advice from each week. Thanks so much to Denise, Gail, Gretchen, Juli, Julie, and Todd for your numerous hours spent in meetings, great wisdom, and creative

WORKING SMARTER: WHAT HAVE YOU DONE TODAY TO MAKE YOUR PATRONS’ LIVES EASIER?
By Andrea Tillander, Research Manager, Clausen Miller P.C.
atillander@clausen.com

I love things that make my life easier. Whether it’s an iPhone app¹ that lets me dictate an impromptu to-do list or a ring sling that lets me carry my daughter comfortably and get things done around the house, I am all about saving time.

While the concept of saving time seems simple enough, one can easily fall into a daily routine, doing things the same way out of habit, even when there may be a better way.

Life in the legal information world isn’t much different. Firm and academic law librarians alike can forget how important it is to explore new ways of delivering services and content. Often we are so busy managing the services and content we have, it doesn’t even occur to us to look for alternatives.

At Clausen Miller I recently implemented our WorldCat Local mobile site², which allows attorneys and staff to do a quick search of our catalog via their mobile devices. WorldCat Local mobile makes our patrons’ lives easier by enhancing their ability to access our catalog. It also saves staff time responding to questions about whether we have an item. A definite “win-win” for our organization.

Michael Stephens’ Tame the Web blog had a post not too long ago featuring a really powerful quote that put it another way:

“Every Decision We Make Affects How People Experience the Library. Let’s Make Sure We’re Creating Improvements.”³

Ultimately the patron’s experience is what defines us. How do your patrons define your services? Do you agree with the definition? What can you improve that would really make a difference to them?

Empathy is key. Routinely examine your services and resources from the patron perspective. Some will be more or less tech savvy than you. Some will have different worldviews. Examining all possible perspectives can help you identify opportunities for improvement. Be mindful of trends and figure out which best fit with your organization’s strategic plan.

Let’s strive to improve the entire research experience of our patrons. Sometimes this will mean we have to do things differently than we used to. By making our patrons’ lives easier, we reinforce our value and work smarter.

solutions. I’d like to also thank our terrific Co-Editors, Thomas Keefe and Margaret Schilt, for their fantastic work on each issue and for making the CALL Bulletin so interesting and timely with a topical approach this year for some of the issues.

I wish you a very joyous welcome to the spring season! Let’s keep our momentum moving as we organize spring events, reevaluate and rearrange our professional goals, and reach the conclusion of a vibrant CALL year.

Warm regards,
Heidi
The second Business Meeting of the 2010-2011 year was held at Maggiano’s Little Italy at 516 N. Clark Street. The meeting was sponsored by FASTCASE. CALL President Heidi Kuehl introduced new member Laura Owen of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom LLP.

The topic of the meeting was “Delivering Value: Making an Impact at Your Firm”. CALL Vice-President/President-Elect Julia Jackson introduced the speakers: Patrick Lamb and Nicole Auerbach of the Valorem Law Group, a litigation firm designed to provide value using customized fee structures. The moderator was Colleen Cable from Cable and Clark.

According to Ms. Cable the presentation was designed to elicit the value thought process. In the past, Colleen had reached out to both Nicole and Patrick based on her impression of Patrick’s blog and asked to partner with them on a value presentation program.

Ms. Cable began the discussion with an analysis of recent trends in law librarianship. The speakers emphasized that law librarianship=change. In support of their proposition they described several influences that are currently impacting the profession: Millennials’ reliance on the Internet, shrinking print collections, professional identity crisis (SLA’s attempts at taking “librarian” out of their name and Morrison and Foerster moving their library into their marketing department), the “graying” of the profession along with extensive librarian layoffs, and the introduction of outsourcing services to companies such as Integreon library consortium.

The speakers analyzed the impact alternative fee arrangements are having on the “business” of law, including pressure for significant cost cutting driven by clients’ demands for efficiency. The discussion highlighted four essential points: 1) taking charge and creating change; 2) defining (redefining) value; 3) evaluation of services on the basis of value to the customer; and 4) communicating value to clients and management.

A panel discussion followed. The Valorem Group was formed in January 2008. All four founding members were “big law refugees” who felt that clients were looking for something different. They specialize in complex litigation without dealing with the billable hour. They talked to clients at length before forming the firm. There is an ongoing pressure to add value. Nicole’s summary of the clients’ advice is “don’t boil the ocean to make a cup of tea.” The clients did not like first year salary increases or rising fees. Clients wanted to share risk with law firm.

The Valorem Group wanted to create change, embrace change and bring change to the profession. A crucial question our profession should be asking is “How can you redefine value?” In Valorem’s case, it communicated with clients about their needs and presented alternatives. The economy helped them because the issue of alternative fees became a hot issue that they could capitalize on. People were willing to listen because the approach was drastically different than the billable hours approach.

Patrick suggested that rather than us defining value we should think about how we can let our clients define our value. “The customer is always right” sounds good but is not really true. They pay the bills though so they have to believe they are always right. Two points to consider are:

1) lawyers are not comfortable with change, and 2) the world is changing at an unparalleled rate. Our clients are riding AND causing the change. There is a gap between client and law firm that is expanding at an ever faster rate as well as an exponential growth in production of information. Patrick asserted that information is essentially free as far as clients are concerned. Lawyers must focus on the value they are bringing to the table. These issues should be discussed with the client. Client should not necessarily decide the value, but you should come to a common understanding about the value librarians bring to the table. Our strength is in management of information, quality of information, filtering of information – and all this is an invaluable task! Getting the best and most relevant information is an enormously valuable service. Nicole suggested that to communicate our value we should first eliminate the mindset we have come to know. When looking at the business of law how are we driving revenue or helping someone to drive revenue? What unique value can we provide because we are so fast and efficient? One of her suggestions is a weekly memo that summarizes the biggest client-related things we had a hand in that happened in the week. Google alerts are not helpful. Think about the bottom line – is this helpful? Talk to people in the firm – what do THEY think your value is? If catalog takes 20% of your time, but only 2 lawyers use it then that does not add appropriate value.

Patrick paraphrased General (now Secretary) Eric Shinseki as saying “if you dislike change you will like irrelevance even less.” The world is one in which people are judged by metrics and return on investment. His closing remarks were; “If I were the controller of knowledge and information, and I could design it from the start what would it look like? Whatever knowledge we have we need to utilize it as efficiently and as fast as possible. If we started from scratch what would our job look like and what do we need to do to get there?”

President Heidi Kuehl thanked the speakers and introduced Committee announcements. Three committees made announcements. Nominations Chair Sheri Lewis announced the candidates for office and thanked her committee for its work. Community Service announced receipt of several blankets and stuffed animals for donation to Hull House and cash from the canisters for donation to the Center for Disability and Elder Law. Julienne Grant of the Public Relations Committee announced a CALL-Up Event on December 1st at Café Iberico. The next CALL Business Meeting will be held on Thursday, February 17th, 2011. The door prize drawing was sponsored by LexisNexis and won by Tom Keefe and Hilary Gray.

The AALL Computing Services Special Interest Section (CS-SIS)’s Web 2.0 Challenge is an online course for law librarians about social media and how to use it in their libraries. It is a comprehensive and social learning opportunity designed for law librarians based on hands-on use of these technologies.

Each of the five sessions includes:

- An introduction to the topic and suggested learning outcomes for the week
- A screen cast explaining the technology with step-by-step instructions on its use
- Links for further learning
- Examples of libraries/librarians using the featured tool
- An assignment with activities designed to give you hands-on experience with each tool

Whether you’re just browsing some of the articles listed or you’re looking for additional ideas for a particular social networking solution, you have the flexibility to decide how much or how little information meets your needs. To follow along with the course, log in as a guest. (Guests may access most course content, but may not contribute to the site.)

November 2003
I spent my junior year in college (I won’t reveal the year) in Madrid, Spain. It was truly a wonderful experience – not only the education part of it, but also the opportunity to explore Madrid and its environs inside and out. Last May, I decided to revisit part of my experience and return to some of my favorite haunts in and around Spain’s spectacular capital city. It was truly a nostalgic journey to find the building where I had lived, eat in my favorite restaurant (the name had changed, but the food was still divine), and view my favorite paintings at the Prado and Sorolla Museums. During my time in Spain last year, I also took time to venture back to the Royal Monastery of El Escorial (now a UNESCO World Heritage Site), which is about an hour’s drive northwest of Madrid.

A project of King Philip II (1527-1598), the Royal Monastery of San Lorenzo de El Escorial was constructed between 1563 and 1584 in honor of St. Lawrence. Designed by Spanish architects Juan Bautista de Toledo and Juan de Herrera, the El Escorial complex encompasses 11 acres and contains some 2,600 windows, 1,200 doors, and 86 staircases. It is an imposing and austere structure, constructed in light-colored stone, which includes royal apartments, several pantheons, a stunning basilica, priceless artwork, and a library. The library is tucked away behind El Escorial’s main façade, at the top of a rather dark stairway, and I frankly admit that I don’t remember seeing it during my first visit.

Although the concept of a royal library was not included in the original plans for El Escorial, architect Juan de Herrera changed the initial design to incorporate Philip II’s vision of a great Renaissance library. Between 1565 and 1569, the king sent books to El Escorial from his personal collection, which included items that he had inherited and acquired, for inclusion in the nearly completed library. These books, some of which dated back to the 13th century, were primarily in Greek, Latin, and Spanish, and included liturgical codices and subject-specific volumes (theology, philosophy, mathematics, astrology, medicine, law, history, and grammar).

About 1570, Philip II, who was an avid bibliophile, began an aggressive purchasing program for the library that preferred manuscripts over printed books, and codices in Greek, Latin, and Spanish, in that order. The ambitious purchasing program also included a search for manuscripts in Arabic and Hebrew. By 1585, the library was finished, and a Royal Librarian (Benito Arias Montano) was named to catalogue the books and manuscripts. Some of the materials were actually loaned out to scholars; the El Escorial library is indeed often considered to be the first public library in Spain. At the time of Philip II’s death in 1598, the library contained almost 3,000 manuscripts (1,870 in Arabic) and 1,700 printed books.

The library itself is certainly one of the most beautiful in the world. It contains five rooms and covers two floors. The largest chamber, known as “The Print Room,” is 177 x 30 x 33 feet, and the bookcases reach halfway to the ceiling. In this magnificent space, there is a gray marble floor, elegant inlaid wood, and a spectacular vaulted ceil-

The ceiling, frescoed by the Italian painter Peregrino Tibaldi (1527-1596), is truly The Print Room’s most prominent feature. Divided into sections—each dedicated to one of the liberal arts—the ceiling offers a compendium of the seven areas of knowledge considered most important in the 16th century: Grammar, Rhetoric, Dialectics, Arithmetic, Music, Geometry, and Astronomy. Also included in the frescoes are portraits of various scholars and authors, including Socrates, Pliny the Elder, Virgil, Homer, Ptolemy, and Euclid.*

Today, the library contains 45,000 print volumes, and a rich collection of 5,000 manuscripts—all included in a searchable online catalog. Although most of these works were not part of Philip II’s collection (a catastrophic fire in 1671 destroyed many of the library’s original volumes), the library still retains the grandeur and aura of the original space. As Philip II initially commanded, the book bindings are turned inward to protect them from outside light, and the titles are written on the outward-facing edges. The library also houses several magnificent globes from the 16th century, as well as some splendid examples of furniture from the period. Truly a remarkable example of a Renaissance library, as well as a splendid remnant of Spain’s Golden Age, the El Escorial library is worth the extra effort to see it.

COOK COUNTY LAW LIBRARY TOUR
By Alina Kelly, Neal, Gerber & Eisenberg LLP
akelly@ngelaw.com

On January 14th Mr. Bennie Martin and Ms. Jean Wenger kindly opened up their library to CALL members. Mr. Martin and Ms. Wenger discussed the collection development philosophy in the Cook County Law Library, and then gave us a tour of the facilities.

Located on the 29th floor of the Daley Center, the Library has a wonderful view of the lake, expansive reading areas and stacks full to bursting of local, state, federal, international and foreign law materials.

The Library is particularly strong in city and county legislative material, and even has a hand annotated copy of the Chicago Municipal Code in its collection as well as compiled legislative histories. The Proceedings of the City Council of Chicago from 1862 to the present are also in the collection.

Foreign and international law is another strength of the Library. Ms. Wenger explained that the Library has many family law materials for foreign countries to serve the court system, as international child custody issues appear frequently in the county courts. Where possible, the collection includes statutes in English, but more often only the original language is available, with summaries in English. The Commonwealth countries are particularly well represented.

Another valuable resource of the Library is the staff. Mr. Martin and Ms. Wenger are incredibly knowledgeable and helpful librarians, and Paul Mikulik is a foreign and international law material guru. The circulation staff is always helpful and willing to assist. It was a pleasure to tour a library with such excited and eager-to-share staff. Thanks for sharing your library with us, CCLL!

Another lively discussion is currently taking place on the AALL’s Private Law Libraries Special Interest Section Listserv. It began simply, but has now evolved into the issue of the marketing and publicizing of law firm library services. For purposes of brevity, I will keep it simple here and confine the discussion more narrowly to the initial question, which asked the PLL-SIS members if any had renamed the library. The writer was considering a name change to “Research Services” or “Information Center” as a couple of possibilities, responding to that library’s shrinking print collection. Listserv response was immediate and heavy on both sides of the issue. At present, those in favor of the name change appear to outweigh those against.

Those who argued against the changing of the name “library” did so for the following reasons. People do understand what a library is, even if some explanation of its expanding function is necessary from time to time. The subtitle of this column came from another response, in that a rose by any other name is still a rose. Another argued that the library is a function, not a location, and that this function should be flexible enough to adapt and evolve with a changing environment. The first suggestions for the marketing of the library begin with a call for the promotion of library services through face to face meetings and electronic tools, and that—with that knowledge—the actual name “library” would not be the issue.

Advocates of changing the name did so for a few compelling reasons. Perhaps one of the biggest reasons had to do with outside pressures, rather than how the term “library” was perceived within the firm. One respondent wrote that time is less likely written off if alternative terms to “library” and “librarian” are used, as those very names invoke unwelcome stereotypes. Another member wrote that the word “library” no longer conveys the full scope of expertise and responsibilities and are equated by the clients to more paraprofessional work. Therefore, research librarians have become “analysts,” who report to the research manager. Still another writer related that one of his firm’s major clients insisted that they not be charged for “library” services or “librarian” research time, which is independent of how well regarded the library was within the firm’s culture. He went on to state that while a name change may delay this trend, it would not be postponed indefinitely, as clients look to ways to mitigate high legal fees in a still-contracting economy. One former “librarian” indicated that his department was now called Research Services, and suggested that jobs need not be lost due to the name of the department.

Another writer argued that it is primarily the term “library” that has a negative connotation. Libraries are an expense for private law firms, and have traditionally occupied a great deal of space. There is a prevailing trend to decrease the library’s floor space, which more than likely can be linked to shrinking print collections (a direct result of electronic resources), as well as a desire on the part of the firm to mitigate rising publishing and online costs in order to control budgets more effectively.

There is no consensus on whether a name change for the library in the private firms is desirable. Perhaps the ultimate answer to the question lies in the broad middle ground: where we as librarians need to make sure that our expertise and capabilities are communicated effectively to the firm and, by extension, to the firm’s clients.

What Are QR Codes?

QR or Quick Response codes are 2-D, mobile barcodes for high speed delivery of information.¹ The information can be a URL, contact address, or other text. You scan the QR code with the camera on your mobile device and it takes you to the webpage, audio file, video, or other content.

Denso-Wave, a subsidiary of Toyota, created the QR code in 1994 for use in tracking vehicle parts in automobile manufacturing.² Originally popular in Japan, QR codes are increasingly used in the U.S. with the rise in popularity of the mobile phone and for a variety of purposes. For instance, a QR code connects readers to Project Gutenberg mobile page for eBooks.³

Just a Fad or Here to Stay?

QR codes are everywhere.⁴ Some question whether QR codes are here to stay (are they just a fad,¹ the most current technology buzz, “soon forgotten”?), and some hate them,¹¹ and have noted some negative aspects. The QR code pattern can be dizzying; there may be interface issues; QR codes may send users to sites that are not optimized for mobile devices.⁷

Nevertheless, QR codes are definitely being used by libraries.⁵ San Diego State University and the University of Nebraska-Lincoln libraries are prominent users of QR code technology.⁸ Check out this “QR-Codes-At-a-Glance Comic Tutorial.”¹⁰ And Slaw’s Steven Matthews sees future QR code use by legal practitioners:

“I’m only hitting the tip of the iceberg here in terms of what QR codes have the potential to deliver. And obviously, there’s a big question as to how fast this technology might go mainstream. However, considering the incredibly fast adoption of smart phones, and the rise of mobile marketing generally, it’s not inconceivable that QR Codes might become a valuable mobile tech-tool that lawyers and firms may employ.”¹¹

There are different types of QR codes. They come in a variety of visual configurations, colors, and sizes. And they’re showing up everywhere – in magazines, newspapers, and business cards, and on T-shirts, billboards, signs, buildings, and even cupcakes.¹² They also can be edible, like the QR waffle.¹³ Yum!

QR Code Readers/Decoders

To equip your smartphone to read QR codes, download a free reader. “Mobile Barcodes” lists the most popular QR code readers.¹⁴ These include the NeoReader, Kaywa Reader, and Bee Tagg reader. Or use a barcode scanner app capable of reading QR codes. You can also enter the URL for a page with a QR code on it, or upload a saved QR code file onto the ZXing Decoder Online to read it.

QR Code Generators

A QR code can hold up to 7,089 characters.¹⁵ However, the more content packed into a QR code, the more sensitive a QR code scanner needs to be.¹⁶ To generate a QR code, you can use Kaywa. Kaywa encodes URLs, text up to 250 characters, and SMS: http://qrcode.kaywa.com/. It generates QR codes in different sizes (S, M, L, XL). Another QR code generator is ZXing (“Zebra Crossing”). It is open-source, and enables encoding of the following types of content:

- Calendar event

- Contact information
- Email address
- Geo location
- Phone number
- SMS (phone number and message)

Are QR Codes Used in Chicago Law Libraries?
Yes! A couple of local law libraries have started deploying or thinking of deploying QR codes to provide mobile users with quick access to research resources. John Marshall uses a QR code to promote its new mobile catalog:

Besides including the QR code in the LCD display at the entrance to the reading room, John Marshall Law Library also published it in the Law School’s In the Loop newsletter. In fall 2010, Loyola formed a working group to consider implementing QR codes in the law library. The article announcing the group includes a QR code that lets students take video tours of the library. Chicago-Kent’s Debbie Ginsberg participated in a recent Law School Tech Talk podcast on the pros and cons of QR codes. She termed QR codes a “disruptive moment” instead of an “information I need right now” moment for law library users.

QR Codes in Law Libraries Generally
Hamline University Law Library’s Megan Jens lists the following possible uses of QR codes in libraries:

- Resources: Use QR codes to label items in your collection. If a user finds a good book, but wants to see further information about that resource or see similar items, the QR code could direct them to the library catalog.

- Marketing: A QR Code on a flyer for a library event could direct the user to a website with more information on the event, or add the event to the user’s mobile calendar, or provide directions to where the event is being held.

- Education: One idea is to set up a QR code for different sections of your collection. A QR code at the end of the shelf for government documents could direct the user to a pathfinder on legislative history materials or the GPO Access/FDSys website. Do your patrons need a refresher on how to use the Regional Reporter Digests? Have the QR code connect to a video tutorial.

CALI has developed several QR codes for help power virtual audio law library tours. It has a LibTour for the Annotated Law Reports (ALR) (written by Beth DiFelice), the Code of Federal Regulations (CFR) (written by Cynthia Bassett), and American Jurisprudence (Am. Jur.) (written by Kevin Baggett). These are accompanied by written transcripts and printable posters. For each, CALI encourages librarians to download the pre-made poster and:

“Print the PDF, and post it close to your library’s collection. Students can scan the QR code to hear the audio file instantly on their smart phones.”
